

TRUMP TOWER
INSIDE THE DONALD'S TORONTO DEBACLE

REGULY ON THE GLOBAL GAS GLUT
SIMONS THE REVOLUTION
WILL BE ACCESSORIZED

THE POT ECONOMY

WHY BOND YIELDS ARE KEEPING US UP AT NIGHT ■ DISRUPTION: HOW TO COMBAT DIGITAL DISTRACTION

REPORT ON BUSINESS

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

BEEFER MONEY MURDER

HOW DICK OLAND'S
DEATH SHOOK A FAMILY
DYNASTY TO ITS CORE

BY ERIC ANDREW-GEE

NET LOSSES

The NHL hates a weak loonie. While the Canadian dollar has rallied recently, it remains well below parity, last reached in early 2013. About one-third of the league's revenues are generated in Canada, and as the loonie declines, those income streams all become less lucrative when converted to U.S. dollars. Since total revenues are divided 50-50 between the league and its players, the pressure from a declining currency trickles down to every NHL paycheque. This year, players are expected to forfeit 17% of their salaries to escrow, a portion of which is typically refunded when accounts are reconciled in the off-season. "We're advising our players not to expect a refund this year," says Matthew Bacchiochi, a portfolio manager at Gavin Management Group, which manages money for several players. /Tim Shufelt

Shea Weber
Nashville Predators

Top-paid player by cash salary, 2015-16

$14
MILLION (U.S.)

Expected escrow deductions

$2.4
MILLION

PHOTOGRAPH MIKE STRASINGER/AP